

About the Journal

The Journal of Studies in the English Language (jSEL) is a well-established, peer-reviewed journal managed by the Department of English at the Faculty of Liberal Arts, Thammasat University, Thailand. Since its founding in 2003, the journal has given academics from the ASEAN region and beyond a vital platform to publish their creative works on English, especially in relation to the difficulties associated with teaching and learning the language and the perspectives of non-Western scholars on Western literature. The journal's strict double-blind peer review procedure, which guarantees that all published articles fulfil the highest criteria of academic integrity, is proof of its dedication to high-quality scholarship.

jSEL publishes work written in English and on the topic of the English language, including empirical research articles, academic articles, review articles, and book reviews. jSEL welcomes work done by ASEAN scholars that focuses on the unique challenges and issues surrounding the use of English in this part of the world. jSEL is especially interested in issues related to English language use in transcultural, translanguaging, and translational settings. These issues include work done in the following broad areas:

- English language teaching, learning, and assessment
- Discourse, register, and stylistic analysis of English varieties
- Intercultural communication
- Literary & cultural studies
- Translation and interpretation

We publish three issues a year in electronic format only

- Issue 1: January–April,
- Issue 2: May–August
- Issue 3: September–December